NEIGHBOR DISPUTES AND YOUR FAMILY CHILD CARE HOME BUSINESS

Neighbor disputes arise for a variety of reasons, some of which may relate to your child care business. As a family child care home provider you have several options for addressing these disputes or harassment that may include insults or obscenities directed at you, your family, your helpers, your parents, or even the children in your care, actions impeding the use of your home as a business, reporting you to Licensing, and other similar acts. This handout discusses options available to you when facing such a situation.

Helpful Tip #1

You should notify Community Care Licensing ("Licensing") about the situation through an Unusual Incident/Injury Report (Form LIC 624B) regardless of the steps you take with your neighbor. This allows you to be proactive in the event that the neighbor attempts to report you to Licensing as part of the harassment. It also ensures that Licensing is aware of the situation and helps to create a written record.

Helpful Tip #2

It is also important to maintain a written log throughout the dispute. This log should include descriptions of the dispute and the steps you have taken to solve the problem. At the end of this document is a sample log that you can use to keep track of the dispute. It is important to write down both your neighbor's behavior and efforts you have taken to resolve the situation.

1. Discuss the Issue with Your Neighbor

It is always best to address the issue directly with your neighbor before it escalates further as you will have to continue living near your neighbor. As a result, you will want to keep the relationship and any interaction towards resolving the problem as civil as possible.

Take time to start writing down the harassing events before you speak with the neighbor. This will allow you to ensure your facts are straight and to think about what you will say. A written record may also be useful later if your efforts to resolve the problem fail. Another recommendation is to speak to others about the problem. This may include other neighbors and landlords who may know about the problem directly, as well as others in your life who may offer valuable advice.

During your conversation with your neighbor, assume the neighbor is unaware of the effects of his actions and present your point of view by offering specific examples of the neighbor's actions that make you uncomfortable. Inform your neighbor that you are a licensed provider. If your neighbor is not already aware you are licensed, knowing this may change his attitude towards your neighbor. Listen to your neighbor carefully and if you cannot respond ask the neighbor for time to think about the issue.
2. Write a Letter to Your Neighbor

Writing a letter to your neighbor is useful if your direct attempts to solve the problem have not worked. A letter also shows your neighbor that you are serious about resolving the issue. This alone may bring about a resolution. It can also serve as part of your written record, if you sue in small claims court.

Your letter should state facts that outline your neighbor’s actions, how it affects you and the children in your program, and reasonable accommodations you are willing to accept in order for you both to enjoy your neighborhood in peace. You should also state that you are prepared to take additional steps to stop the behavior, including the ones described further in this handout. You should send your letter via certified mail so that you have evidence of when the letter is received.

3. Request Mediation

What is mediation?

Mediation is a process where disputing individuals engage an impartial third party with the goal of finding a middle ground to resolve the dispute. The third party may communicate with the disputing parties separately or together, depending upon the situation. Each party will have an opportunity to tell his or her side of the story, and the third party will assist the parties in understanding each point of view. If the parties reach an agreement, the third party may even help the parties make a contract that is legally enforceable in court.

When is mediation useful?

Mediation is useful when the dispute cannot be solved by the two parties alone. Since mediation involves bringing other people into the dispute, it is a good tool to use after direct communication with your neighbor has been unsuccessful because it allows for a third party to facilitate indirect communication.

Mediation is cheaper and quicker than going to court. Some organizations offer free mediation programs. More information may be found in the Mediation vs. Litigation handout on the Public Counsel website.¹

4. Call the Police

Sometimes speaking to, writing to, or offering mediation to your neighbor will not stop the harassing activity. In certain instances, depending on your judgment, calling the police will be required. This is especially the case when there is hostility or potential for danger. It is important to know that this is a serious step and should only be used when necessary.

When the police come, you should carefully explain why you called. You may even present them with the log you have kept, including a copy of the letter you sent the neighbor. This will show the police both the nature of the issue and let them know you are organized and serious about the matter. The police may be able to act as your witness if your dispute ends up in court. You should ask them whether they would agree to this or submit a statement on your behalf.

What is a restraining order?

A restraining order is a court order that prevents your neighbor from continuing to harass you. It can be enforced by calling the police and any violation of the order could result in a jail sentence for your neighbor.

When is a restraining order useful?

A restraining order is a good tool if the harassment is severe or you feel you are at risk for harm. This includes instances where you feel that you need protection from the harassment as soon as possible.

What do I need to prove to receive a restraining order?

You will need to show that there has either been violence, credible threats of violence, or a pattern of harassment directed at you. A pattern of harassment is defined as multiple acts over a period of time showing intent to harass. Acts can include threatening phone calls, letters, following or stalking and other unwanted contact. You must also show that a reasonable person would suffer emotional distress as a result of the harassment and that you indeed did experience emotional distress.

Because you will need to show the effect of the harassment on you, it is important that you document how each instance of harassment makes you feel in your log of events. Your log must be specific, including the date and time of each event and the effect the harassment has had on you.

How do I get a restraining order?

California has several types of restraining orders. The one you will need to prevent neighbor harassment is called a Civil Harassment Restraining Order. To get a restraining order you must obtain the required forms from the court. The process may require a number of forms and will vary depending on the court house you go to.

When you have the proper paperwork ready, it should be filed with the court clerk, along with any supporting documentation you have. Once you file, you will likely have an initial hearing with a judge that same day. The court will require you to inform your neighbor that you are filing papers at least 24 hours in advance. At the initial hearing, the court may issue a temporary restraining order (TRO) if the judge is convinced that you need immediate protection.

The court will hold a full hearing within three weeks of the initial hearing. At this point the court will determine whether you can receive a permanent restraining order. A judge will determine if there has been harassment and whether it has adversely affected you.

A judge may only issue a permanent restraining order for up to three years. If the harassment continues after the restraining order expires, you must go through the same process to receive another one.

What are the disadvantages of applying for a restraining order?

2 California Code of Civil Procedure §527.6
Applying for a restraining order can be costly. You may ask the court for a fee waiver. Before applying, speak to the court clerk about the cost information and whether you would be eligible for a waiver of fees. In addition, you may need to pay someone to notify the neighbor that you have filed to obtain a restraining order. You may have to pay the Sheriff an additional sum for this.

Applying for a restraining order may also take several hours. The forms are complex and gathering the required information can take some time. You will also need to be able to go to the courthouse both to file the forms and for the hearings. This is also time you will need to spend away from your business.

6. File a Small Claims Court Matter

What is small claims court?

Small claims court is an abbreviated court separate from the traditional court process. There are no juries, no lawyers and less complicated rules. It entails a short (usually 15-20 minutes) hearing with a judge. Both parties must be present. You may only sue for up to $10,000. A judge will hear both sides of the case and issue a ruling. Note that unlike with a restraining order, small claims court allows for the recovery of money damages.

The downsides of small claims court are the amount of time it will take to organize your case and the time it will take to fill out the forms, which may be complex. There are also fees for going to court, which start at $30.00 and go up depending upon the specifics of your case. Also, unlike with the civil restraining order process, it may take several months to see a small claims court judge who will then issue an order stopping the harassment.

When should I pursue a neighbor dispute in small claims court?

Going to small claims court under a private nuisance claim is an alternative to obtaining a restraining order. It is particularly useful when the harassment interferes with your use and enjoyment of your property. You may also claim a neighbor is intentionally inflicting emotional distress if you can show that there has been extreme personal suffering caused by the neighbor on purpose. You may also be entitled to money damages in small claims court, although the amount will likely be very little unless there is clear economic harm such as damage to property, lost wages, and . Small claims court may be the best option if you have been financially harmed as a result of the harassment.

What do I need to show in small claims court?

There are two possible small court claims you may have when a neighbor harasses you: nuisance and intentional infliction of emotional distress.

To win in small claims court for nuisance you must prove your neighbor obstructed your free use of your property. An example would be a neighbor who makes noise that prevents you from sleeping or being outside on your property. The interference must also be unreasonable. This means it is okay for a neighbor to do something considered normal such as bouncing a basketball outside. However, it may be considered unreasonable behavior to bounce the basketball on your garage door and yell obscenities at

you. In short, you are more likely to have success if you show that the activity was directed at you as a form of harassment.⁴

A successful intentional infliction of emotional distress claim will show that the neighbor purposefully caused extreme personal suffering to you.⁵

Keep in mind that it is difficult to place a dollar amount on emotional damages as opposed to economic damages. If you have suffered only emotional distress you will need to carefully describe how exactly you have been impacted. When keeping your log it is important that you mention how it has affected you personally so that you can show there are damages such as to your property.

Proving the neighbors harassing behavior should not be difficult if you have kept a detailed log and there are witnesses who can attest to the harassment. Even police officers can be your witnesses. This log should include both how you feel, and how you have limited your activities on your own property. An example would be not using your yard as much as you used to in order to avoid your neighbor.

Summary

Each instance of neighbor harassment is unique. While the steps detailed above are a good starting point, this handout is meant for informational purposes only and may not be comprehensive for your situation. If you are in a dispute with a neighbor it is important that you contact an attorney to review your options. There are a number of ways you can approach a dispute, each with its unique advantages and disadvantages. It is important to consider this as you decide which legal remedy to pursue for your situation.

Dear Neighbor,

I am writing to address your recent actions towards me and my business. As you know, I operate a licensed family child care home business with children under my care. Your actions towards me, including [list description of the harassing activity] are harmful both to me and my business. I have previously addressed this issue with you in person, and yet your harassment has continued.

I am requesting that you cease your harassing activity directed at me and my child care business. If you do not, I will have to use the legal means at my disposal to resolve the matter. My hope is that this letter will allow us to resolve the issue so that we can both enjoy our neighborhood in peace. Please contact me if you have any questions or would like to discuss this matter further.

Sincerely,
